The sudden cold spring of 1851 did terrible mischief to youngerops, the vineyards especially but nothing in comparison to the damage caused by the frost during the closing days of last April The farmers are in mourning; all young and ender vegetation has been mortally nipped. There is no evidence that many vine growers ad recourse to the new process recommended for warding off the effects of frost, by the creaion of artificial clouds produced from the burning of tar or naptha, in earthern pots placed been the lines of the vines. The few instances where the plan was practised, gave more than artial success. The debatable point now is night the frozen, black, and dead shoots, to be runed away or allowed to naturally fall? He may in sense be considered the founder of organic chem istry; he sometimes pushed his theories beyond the corroboration of facts, and was perhaps slow and less clear, when having to part with the un astainable. His mineral theory of the natri n of plants is possibly a case in point, where a he desired to base agriculture on the exclu ive employment of saline manures. His axiom that all systems of culture which do not return to the soil, the elements that the crop take way, but must lead fatally to the exhaustion of the soil, is truth itself. He has also, by the monstration of several laws, put an end to that onfusion which weighed upon our knowledge

But to the settlers of the wilds of Oregon the end of the fight no doubt causes an unmeasured degree of delight and satisfaction. The question now agitated is what to do with these human beasts, whether to hang them or a large number of them, as Gen Davis proposed to do, or to let them loose, to nourish their revenge and to be again the terror of the peaceful settlements. The Government, in whose hands they now are, is brought face to face with this perplexing question. It is one which must hereafter trequently arise in our future relations with these ferocious tribes, and is therefore more embarassing, as the present decision must make a precedent, and must be justified to to the world as well as approved by the country.
